A HEART THROB

This is a heart-throb story. One of those pathetic little tales which makes the blood flow faster and causes the heart to pause for a moment in the tenderness of the thought. The scene is laid in the Supreme Court chamber and the hour when the officials of the election recount are at their labors. The heads of all are bent over the green-tinted ballots and each side of the great controversy is trying to gain a point.

The door opens noiselessly and a stranger enters. He pauses and looks upon the gathering and the tenseness of the situation seems to affect him. Slowly the court's commissioner raises his dark orbs and lets them wander over the form of the stranger. The court bailiff does half as much gazing as the commissioner and upon a sign from his superior asks, "Are you looking for some one?" The stranger gasps for a moment in an endeavor to control his husky voice and says, "I was looking for the Attorney General."

There is silence for a moment and then a sigh appeared to come through the window which seemed to say, "So are we."

Springmeyer looked at Baker, Baker looked at Springmeyer, the bailiff nudged Springmeyer and Joseph stepped on Baker's toes. Springmeyer gasped and Baker arose and said "I am the man" while Springmeyer looked as if he doubted it.

The commissioner arose to the occasion and declared a short recess and the spell was broken.

This is what we call a heart-throb story. One of those stories that are told when the lights are low and all are sleepy and tired.—Carson News.

THE ELECTION RESULT

The decision on the liquor question in Salt Lake City Tuesday was a rebuke to the hypocrisy and trickery through which the Federal bunch undertook to impose upon the people a sham issue. There was a good vote cast, and the result is so decisive as to make the result entirely conclusive. It is not likely that, for a long time to come, there will be any further trouble here in regard to this question. It is now up to the saloon-keepers of this city to vindicate in the conduct of their business the confidence which the people of this city have imposed in them by their votes, and the saloons should be run strictly according to law and ordinances. There should be no attempts at evasion, at trickery, or at encroachment, or taking liberties. The vote of the people of this city yesterday was based on the proposition that, if the liquor question is trusted to the saloons, that the saloons will do what is right about it, will conform to the law and the ordinances, and will keep places above reproach. If they do not do this, if they violate their part of the agreement, they abuse the confidence of Salt Lake.

The question simply was whether the liquor business should be conducted by retail so far as the drinker is concerned, or by wholesale. Or concretely, the point was, whether one wanting a drink of whiskey or a glass of beer could go into a saloon run according to law and ordinance and get it and go quietly about his business, or whether he would be obliged to go to a manufacturer or agent and buy in wholesale quantities, with the probability of his consuming more than he wanted or was good for him. The city decided, in this view of it, on retail drinking in place of wholesale drinking.

The results throughout the state have, from present appearances, been in favor of wholesale drinking in place of drinking by retail. Ogden goes "wet," Provo "dry," meaning thereby that the people there will do as heretofore, import beer and liquor by the car load and guzzle it surreptitiously in place of openly and moderately in saloons that yield revenue to the city. The revenue question was a strong factor in the election in Salt Lake. Here we get upwards of $225,000 a year from saloons, and this sum, unless we were to slack up in progress and improvements, would have to be imposed upon the taxpayers in their general rates, which would mean an addition of about five mills to the taxes.

Salt Lake City has solved the question for some time to come. But those portions of the state which are voted "dry" will, a good many of them, we fear, find that they have voted themselves into far worse trouble than if they had voted "wet."—Salt Lake Tribune.

How the Standard Oil and the tobacco trust must wish they had been only a merger.

SUMMARY ACTION NEEDED.

At its meeting Wednesday the governing committee of the San Francisco mining stock and exchange board will take up the scandal brought upon that institution by the bucketshop brigands and their secret allies. The governing committee is now fully alive to the fact that the fraudulent practices of the brigand brokers must be stopped at once or else the exchange will be ruined. Its members know that their action to this end must be drastic and immediate, and without public confidence the exchange might as well go out of business.

The conditions are such that decided action in this relation has become necessary if the brokers are not to be reduced to playing the game merely among themselves. The public will stay out of a market when it is known that prices are systematically rigged by means of fictitious sales, as has notoriously been the case with Comstock quotations of recent record. If the broker are not to be reduced to swapping jack knives among themselves it is essential that means shall be taken to restore public confidence.

The governors have ample power to punish offenders who stuff the market quotations by means of "wash sales," but the practice has been winked at, possibly because it might seem to produce the impression of a lively market and good business. That theory might work well enough if the public did not become aware of what was going on, but suspicion is easily aroused in this field. In fact, nothing less than scrupulous honesty of exchange transactions will serve to make the business prosperous in a steady and legitimate way.

The governing committee has power to punish offending brokers and that power should be remorselessly exercised. Neither will it suffice merely to fine the guilty men, because a broker may easily make a profit out of a fraudulent transaction greater than the sum of his fine. This plan of punishment would make the exchange a sort of partner in the profits of fraud. If, on the other hand, brokers know that they will be suspended or expelled for making any "wash sales" they will understand at once that such practices will be fatal to their right to do business on the exchange.

It is a much-needed measure of self-defense for the brokers that the Call urges upon the exchange authorities. They can not afford to be tolerant nor can they afford to delay. The newspapers have been at the pains to lay bare dealing through the exchange. They will be glad of the opportunity to let the legitimate investors and speculators know that these conditions have been corrected and that the piratical operators have been dealt with so that they dare not and can not hereafter injure lawful business on the board. Nothing less than summary action and a severe tightening of the rules will suffice.—Call.

RENO WILL HAVE WHOOPLA TIME

Two days full of entertaining and interesting events will be afforded all who attend the celebration of Washoe's 50th anniversary at Reno on July 3d and 4th. The program has been completed and never before have those in charge of a public demonstration been able to offer the public events of such widespread importance.

On the 3rd the reunion of old pioneers will draw the old-timers from every section of the state and from many California points. At least 500 are expected to be in the automobile parade in the morning and attend the reception in the afternoon. Their signatures will be obtained on a sheepskin scroll for preserving in the records of the State Historical society.

On the Fourth the aviation flights by Eugene Ely will draw thousands from Nevada and California. Lake Tahoe will be crowded over Sunday as many will avail themselves of the rates going into effect on the first of July and spend Sunday at the famous resort, returning to Reno Sunday night.

Races, baseball games, dancing on the streets and platforms, Mardi Gras features, and other entertaining features will fill every moment of the two days.
